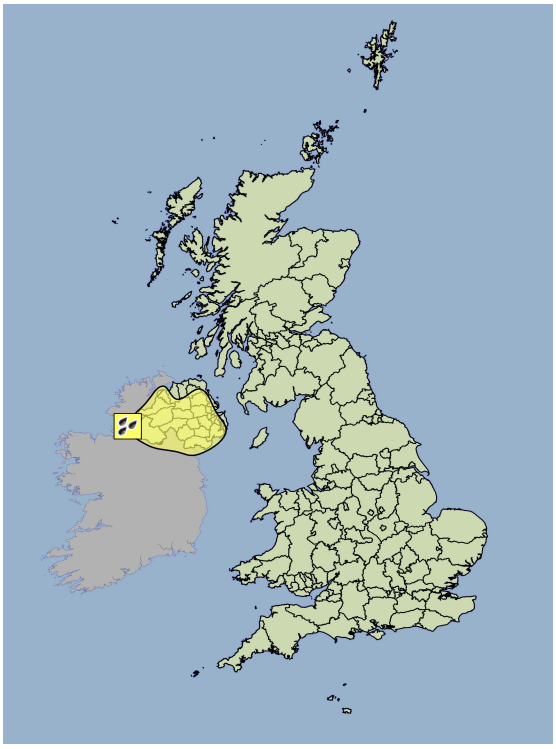
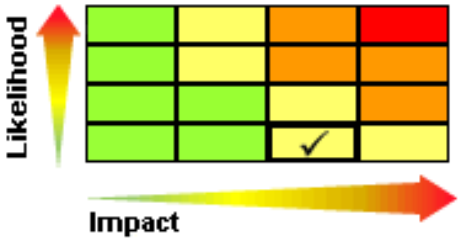
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The current settled spell of weather will break down as an Atlantic low pressure system pushes in across the area later Friday. More than 40 mm could fall within 24 hours in places, though most parts are likely to have much less, and at this stage there remains a lot of uncertainty about how extensive and heavy the rain will be.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 18:00 on Fri, 11th Sep 2015 until 14:00 on Sat, 12th Sep 2015

Outbreaks of rain will spread eastwards across Northern Ireland later Friday, probably turning persistent and heavy in places during Friday evening and into Saturday before clearing from the west.

The public should be aware of the potential for disruption due to flooding and hazardous driving conditions.

This is an update to the warning issued on Thursday.
